

Earth

This fragment that struck a planet left behind something more, than just a melted core and a moon. It left behind something unknown to this universe, an unexplainable phenomenon.

A couple billion years passed before the conditions for this unknown were right, this awareness would develop and integrate into the material world.

Constant interaction, observation and adaptation, creating life. With each interaction it would learn and become more complex and so did their observations. It started to observe their abyss, only to find out that we are their abyss.
